Migration Story of Kerim

Once upon a time, in the vibrant city of Vienna, Austria, Kerim C. was born in 1984 to a family deeply rooted in the cultural tapestry of both Austria and Türkiye. His family's journey began in the 1970s when they migrated from the picturesque province of Aydın to Austria in search of better opportunities.

Growing up in the heart of Vienna, Kerim experienced the blend of Austrian and Turkish cultures, finding solace in the melodies of Turkish folk songs while embracing the Austrian way of life. However, as the years passed, a longing for their homeland grew stronger within his family.

In the early 1990s, fueled by nostalgia and a desire to reconnect with their roots, Kerim's family made the heartfelt decision to return to Türkiye. Despite the excitement of returning to their homeland, leaving behind the memories and familiarity of Vienna was bittersweet for Kerim.

As Kerim settled into his new life in Türkiye, pursuing his passion for education and becoming a teacher, he often found himself reminiscing about his childhood days in Vienna. The bustling streets of Wien, the aroma of freshly baked strudels, and the warmth of his family's home were memories etched deeply in his heart.

Despite the joy of being reunited with their homeland, Kerim's family couldn't help but feel a pang of regret for the distance that now separated them from his sister, who chose to remain in Vienna. Years of hard work and dedication in Austria had woven strong ties to the country, but the need for visas to visit their daughter served as a poignant reminder of the sacrifices made in pursuit of their dreams. He is upset and sorry for his family about visa issues.

As Kerim stood in front of his classroom, imparting knowledge to eager young minds, he couldn't help but feel a twinge of longing for the streets of Vienna and the laughter of his childhood. Yet, amidst the nostalgia, he found solace in knowing that the richness of his dual heritage would always be a part of him, guiding him through life's journey with resilience and grace.
